HALE

FAMILY

The Hale family is one of the oldest families in the territory now included in the bounds of Tennessee. Several brothers migrated from Virginia (Bedford and Lunenburg Counties) to the Watauga settlement as early as 1778 and there became the founders of that State, which by it's patriotism has long since gained the name of "The Volunteer State". The oldest deed in the records in Tennessee (then North Carolina) was witnessed by one of these brothers. The Baptist Church in Tennessee was begun through the efforts of these Hale brothers, Nicholas, Moshack, Shadrack, Abednego and probably others. A brother-in-law, Rev. Matthew Talbot was among them.

The notes in this collection are, of course, not all that can be found on the Hale family in Tennessee, but do largely give detailed information on this family's entrance into the territory of Tennessee. From this settlement and as time passed, scarcely a County in the State, by the year 1850, was not lacking in some way a connection with this family.

The Hale family is one of the oldest families in the territory now included in the bounds of Tennessee. Several brothers migrated from Virginia (Bedford and Jamesburg Counties) to the Kentucky settlement as early as 1770 and there became the founders of that State, which by its patriotism has long since gained the name of "The Volunteer State". The oldest deed in the records of Tennessee (then North Carolina) was witnessed by one of these brothers. The Baptist Church in Tennessee was begun through the efforts of these late brothers, Nicholas, Shadrack, Abner and probably others. A brother-in-law, Rev. Nathan Taylor was among them.

The notes in this collection are, of course, not all that can be found on the Hale family in Tennessee, but do largely have detailed information on this family's entrance into the territory of Tennessee. From this settlement and as time passed, scarcely a family in the State, by the year 1850, was not looking in some way a connection with this family.
